

I strongly object to the proposed regulation that would require manufacturers to build copy-protection technology into digital television receivers. The regulation would be ineffective in preventing piracy since other content sources are available (such as DVD's). Yet, it seriously infringes on the average consumer's fair-use rights to transfer the content between technology platforms for his/her own use. Please do not implement this ill-considered proposal.